

Neighbors of all
political stripes agree:
East Lansing's city budget needs reform.

A volunteer team of financial experts recommended more than 40 reforms to improve East Lansing's financial sustainability. Yet the City Council has ignored most of those reforms, and instead has jumped straight to proposing a costly new income tax.

This income tax proposal provides city officials with a blank check with no accountability or transparency. There is no legal guarantee that they'd have to spend the funds on East Lansing's budget priorities.

City leaders should look to make reforms before saddling residents with a costly income tax.

Now is not the time for an
